Restoration estimates were placed at £100 million, almost three times more than the designed cost of restoration of 2014. what does the future hold? via architects journalvia architects journal in aftermath of the fire, a debate occurred in the future of the mackintosh, with some claiming that time may be right to demolish the building in place of a modern facility, while others claim that the building is simply intertwined with the history and culture of glasgow and must be restored. the architect and professor alan dunlop, who trained in the art school of glasgow, compared the aerial images and drones of the site with a bombing in the second world war and questioned the authenticity of a brick restoration. he argued that the very charles rennie mackintosh would favor a modern building that takes its place, while the editor of urban magazine john glenday suggests that a new piece of architecture could be created within the original stone wall. the via architects journalvia architects journalothers argued in favor of restoration, such as miles glendinning, professor of architectural conservation of the University of Edimburgo, which points to various projects of reconstruction of public buildings held in the post-war Germany. this project would not be unprecedented in the united kingdom, with great restoration held in the residence of the windsor castle of the royal family, after a fire in 1992, at the cost ofmillions. A final decision on the fate of Mackintosh will likely take some time, as well as the complete facts behind what caused the fire, and if it could have been prevented. Until then, we are left to reflect on the role of the School of Art of Glasgow and Charles Rennie Mackintosh in the advance of architectural thinking and design in the UK and beyond, and if this extensive legacy can endure even after the Mackintosh Building has gone. News via: BBC View allShow less About this author Cite: Niall Patrick Walsh. "The Glasgow School of Art Fire: What Happened, and What Happens Next?". 25 Jun 2018. ArchDaily. Access. < ISSN 0719-8884 It is the chronicle of a foretold tragedy. And on fire. The unique and world-renowned Mackintosh building at the Glasgow School of Art is very damaged in a 2014 fire, where there are no sprinklers to fight it and is quickly spread through flammable and antiquated plumbing. Four years later, it is almost completely destroyed in a hell where, again, there are no sprinklers and where cheap insulation materials and fuels are assembled, ending in which firefighters call fireball. The second fire to the building, known as “the Mack” was, almost an hour, a year after the flames tore through the coating and isolation outside the 24-storey Grenfell Tower and in houses where 72 people died. Mack, with some of the same flammable materials, perished on June 15, 2018, fortunately without life loss. Then, as in the first fire, no one in the management of the art school took responsibility. Muriel Gray, President of the GSA Board of Governors since 2013, announced a few days ago that she was moving away from the role, without excuses or mere guilt, without contrition or humility, only the same arrogant dismissal of criticismIncrections. In a self -and -fertilized interview with The Times, she said: â € œIf I thought that the governance or the administration had led to the incidence, I would: ' Yes', but that did not do. This is no one fits what you have said. Eileen Reid, ex -chief of expanded from GSA, told a Holyrood Committee: â € œwhat one who worked at the art school - I challenge someone to say the contrion - I knew the pron © Dio was a risk. We all knew that. We were usually talking about how many minutes we had to leave. ¢ âferences “I was precise, given 100 years of abusing - but the way the building was used and the presence of inflammable materials . On May 23, 2014, it was later proven, the warmth of a projector lit gases from a foam bowl and fired the fire that tore the old prize. Six months later, the day before the scope of the incoming fire and rescue issued a report about his cause, GSA released a press release in what was clearly an attempt to selectively rotate the story, including that a "student" the Art project caused Blaze. The game of guilt was true, to a certain point. What was missing was this condemnation paragraph of the following day: â € œAm left of the projector removed the painã © is allowing access to the containing maintenance. This wood -covered emptiness acted as a chaminin © and allowed flames, hot gases and smoke to travel vertically. A system of sprinklers would almost certainly have prevented the fire spreading. There was no one. In oral evidencies of the Holyrood Committee, Gray said about his fault: â € œ £ £ o authorized to use a standard aspersion system because it was a building listed in a degree to Mackintosh artifacts and things that would have been destroyed by the water. The alternative was an suppressive system of no fly.
